The two-and-a-half-story main block of the Colonial Revival style dwelling at 1725 Circle Road dates to 1928, augmented by a two-story wing to the northwest elevation (former owners indicate the building was constructed in 1928). The wing was originally constructed as a garage, but converted in the 1940s (former owners say the wing was converted in 1947) for use as living space. A one-story rear addition with enclosed porch was constructed on the southwest elevation of the main block in the 1940s. The wood frame house, measuring three bays wide, is clad in square-butt wood shingles with flared corners. The main block rests on a random rubble stone foundation and is capped with a side gable roof clad in slate tiles. A single exterior-end brick corbeled chimney rises along the southeast elevation.

The house at 1725 Circle Road in Ruxton was constructed in 1928 for E. Ridgely and Elizabeth Simpson. The high-style Colonial Revival-style dwelling, typical of suburban houses in Ruxton, was altered in the 1940s for the Wright family, which retained ownership for twenty years. It was conveyed to William and Judith Campbell in 1960 following the death of Edward Wright, head of Bull Shipping Lines in Baltimore City.

Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

Situated in a suburban landscape, the Colonial Revival-style dwelling at 1725 Circle Road stands on a level grassy lot with foundation plantings and is surrounded by mature trees and shrubs. A paved driveway leads from the road to the house and garage. In addition to the house, there are two historic outbuildings on the property: a stone garage built in 1947 and a wood frame barn circa 1900. A small in-ground pool was installed in 1957 to the immediate rear of the house.

EXTERIOR

The two-and-a-half-story main block of the Colonial Revival style dwelling at 1725 Circle Road dates to 1928, augmented by a two-story wing to the northwest elevation (former owners indicate the building was constructed in 1928). The wing was originally constructed as a garage, but converted in the 1940s (former owners say the wing was converted in 1947) for use as living space. A one-story rear addition with enclosed porch was constructed on the southwest elevation of the main block in the 1940s. The wood frame house, measuring three bays wide, is clad in square-butt wood shingles with flared corners. The main block rests on a random rubble stone foundation and is capped with a side gable roof clad in slate tiles. A single exterior-end brick corbeled chimney rises along the southeast elevation.

The façade (northeast elevation) of the house is symmetrically fenestrated with a central recessed entrance flanked by two 6/6 double-hung wood sash windows. The entry contains a single-leaf 6-paneled wood door with a wood Colonial Revival-style door surround. The high-style door surround is comprised of fluted pilasters and a molded wood fanlight. The door reveals exhibit a paneled soffit and a molded wood ogee cornice. The second story has three 6/6 double-hung wood sash windows and the upper story features three pedimented gable-dormers each holding a 12-light wood casement window. The first and second story windows have narrow wood square-edged surrounds and sills, along with louvered shutters. The three dormers feature molded wood cornices, are clad with square-butt wood shingles, and slate tiles covering their roofs. The northeast elevation of the two-story wing is four bays wide and rests on a concrete block foundation. It is capped by a side gable roof clad in slate tiles. The first story of the wing is perforated by one 6/6 double-hung wood sash window and the second story has four 6/6 double-hung wood sash windows. Each of the windows has similar surrounds and louvered shutters to those of the main block.

Both the two-story wing and the one-story vestibule primarily obscure the northwest elevation of the main block. A single 6/6 double-hung wood sash window pierces the second story, with one 6-light wood casement window in the upper half story, and a wood louvered vent in gable end. Two 6/6 double-hung wood sash windows mark the northwest elevation of the wing on the first story. Each has narrow wood sills and surrounds with louvered shutters. A large wood louvered vent is seen in the gable end of the wing. The northwest elevation of the vestibule addition on the rear of the main block has a centered entrance that contains a single-leaf wood two-panel 6-light door. The northwest elevation of the enclosed porch is illuminated with two 3-light wood casement windows.

Similar to the façade in fenestration is the rear (southwest) elevation. The first story is partially obstructed from view by the enclosed one-story porch. The northern bay contains a tripartite window with two 4/4 double-hung wood sash windows flanking a single 6/6 double-hung wood sash window. The porch, enclosed in the 1980s, is three bays wide with an exterior brick chimney. The porch has a double-leaf 10-light wood door and two 6/6 double-hung vinyl sash windows. The non-historic chimney is constructed in a stretcher bond brick. The second story of the main block contains three 6/6 double-hung wood sash windows with thin wood surrounds and sills, and louvered shutters. The upper story replicates the façade, with three pedimented gable dormers holding single 12-light wood casement windows. The first story of the southwest elevation (rear) of the wing has a tripartite window with 8-light vinyl casements flanking a 12-light fixed vinyl window. The southwest elevation of the vestibule addition holds a paired 6/6 double-hung wood sash window with narrow surrounds and sills, and louvered shutters. The second story of this elevation has three 6/6 double-hung wood sash windows with narrow wood sills and surrounds, and louvered shutters.

Flanking the exterior-end double-shouldered chimney on the southeast elevation are two 6/6 double-hung wood sash windows. The second story is similar to the first in fenestration but includes a round-arched multi-light fixed wood window set into the stack of the chimney. The window in the stretcher-bond brick chimney has a rowlock sill and round-arch rowlock lintel. The upper half story has two 6-light wood casement windows on each side of the chimney. Each of the windows exhibit narrow wood sills and surrounds. The southeast elevation of the enclosed porch is illuminated by paired 10-light wood casement windows featuring narrow wood sills and surrounds, and louvered shutters.

INTERIOR

The interior of the dwelling features a central-passage single-pile plan. The entry vestibule or foyer is located at the northeast end of the main block, with three steps leading up to the main stair hall. A closet located under the main stair augments the small vestibule. To the southeast of the hall is the living room, which extends the depth of the main block. A parlor and pantry, which was originally the kitchen, are located on the northwest side of the hall. The pantry has two sets of stairs on the southeast wall – one to the basement and the second to the first landing of the main stair. At the rear of the main block of the house, with access from the hall and first floor stair passage, is the sun room (enclosed porch) with a separate bathroom to the west. The wing includes a kitchen, family room with a closet, and a vestibule (mudroom) with a closet utility room.

The main hollow newel stair, located on the northwest wall, dominates the wide central passage. The open stair exhibits a round wooden newel post with a plinth and circle-end starter step. The closed stringer features decorative scroll-sawn brackets and acorn drops on the landing newels. The molded rail has an easement and gooseneck crooks, supported by thin round balusters on squat plinths.

The floor of the passage is the original narrow tongue-and-groove boards, measuring 2-¼ inches wide. The plaster walls are finished with a 7-inch high baseboard and chamfered 3-¼ inches chair rail. The baseboard has an ogee-molded base. A coved molding and ogee top molding trim the plaster ceiling. The doublewide openings between the flanking rooms and the passage are framed with four-inch wide casings with a base block and back banding. The front entrance contains a single-leaf 6-panel wood door with a brass knob. The remaining three doors along the hall are double-leaf wood 10-light doors with brass knobs.

The living room is the largest room on the first floor of the house. It has narrow wood flooring, ogee-capped baseboards, plaster walls, and coved molding with an ogee top mold along the plaster ceiling. A slightly projecting chimney breast is located at the center of the southeast wall. The wide breast is ornamented by a tall colonial-Revival style mantel of wood. The fireplace has a brick surround with a herringbone hearth and a soldier course lintel on the face. Narrow paneled pilasters with a swag design flank the opening. Swags and urns are seen on the frieze and the projecting shelf has an ogee profile. Two sets of double-leaf 10-light wood doors with brass knobs provide access to this room from the passage and the rear vestibule. The entry opening from the vestibule is flanked by built-in shelves, which are not original to the house.

The parlor, used as the dining room, has plaster walls with applied wood molding to create paneled fields and wainscoting. It has narrow wood flooring, ogee-capped baseboards, plaster walls with a chair rail, and coved molding with an ogee top mold along the plaster ceiling. Two built-in corner cabinets are located in the east and west corners. They both feature scroll-sawn Chippendale profiles on the top with fluted pilasters flanking the round-arched multi-light door. The lower half of the cabinets has a paneled wood door with no lights. This room has one double-leaf 10-light wood door with brass knobs and one single-leaf 6-panel wood double-acting door.

The original kitchen, now used as a pantry, has replacement vinyl flooring with plaster walls and ceiling. The wood baseboard is 6-½ inches high, with a quadrant shoe molding and shallow torus base molding. The window surround is square-edged wood molding, measuring 3-½ inches wide, and the door surround features square-edged wood molding that is 4-inches wide. There are five single-leaf wood doors in this room – one single-leaf 6-panel double-acting door to the parlor and four doors with five horizontal wood panels. One set of winder stairs leads to the half-landing of the main stair, while the second stair provides access to the basement. The replacement narrow wood crown molding is a cyma recta below a small fillet. Other alterations to this room include built-in kitchen cabinets on the northeast wall.

The enclosed porch, now a sunroom, on the southwest end, has a wood floor with 2-¼ inch boards now covered with carpeting. The 7-inch high baseboard has an ogee-molded base. An ogee crown molding unites the plaster walls and ceiling. The window opening has a replacement surround, while those framing the entry is square-edged with back banding. Three double-leaf wood 10-light doors provide access into the room (one from the exterior). One single-leaf wood 6-panel door leads to the bathroom to the west. A new brick fireplace with a corbeled shelf was constructed on the southwest wall. The room was divided to allow for the construction of a half bathroom and storage closet with built-in shelves.

The wing of the main block, originally constructed as a garage, houses the kitchen and family room. The kitchen has vinyl flooring and built-in cabinets. The family room has wall-to-wall carpeting, papered walls, and a narrow wood baseboard.

The second story of the main block of the house contains four bedrooms. The second floor is finished similarly to the first floor with narrow wood flooring (covered in carpeting), ogee-capped baseboards, plaster walls, and a plaster ceiling. The entry and window openings have square-edged surrounds with back banding. The second floor of the wing holds the master bedroom and bath. The closed stringer winder stairs leads to the upper half story, which is a finished attic with one bathroom, two offices, and a storage room. The full-height basement is not finished, showing parged stone walls and a poured concrete floor. The original coal-burning heater dating from 1928 is still in use.

SECONDARY RESOURCES

To the southeast of the house is a circa 1900 wood frame barn. It stands two stories high and is two bays across. Sitting on a solid random rubble stone foundation and clad with board-and-batten siding, the barn has a single-leaf board-and-batten door and a double-leaf vertical board door. It is capped with a side gable roof covered with asphalt shingles. A shed roof lean-to addition is located on the southwest elevation. A window opening, with no sash, marks the second story.

To the east corner of the house is a half-dug 1947 coursed stone masonry garage. Standing one story high and one bay wide, it rests on a solid poured concrete foundation. It has one roll-up wood paneled door and a hipped slate tile roof.

The in-ground pool, constructed in 1957, sits to rear of the house. It has a concrete base, elliptical in shape, and measures approximately 15 feet in length.

SIGNIFICANCE STATEMENT

The house at 1725 Circle Road in Ruxton was constructed in 1928 for E. Ridgely and Elizabeth Simpson. The high-style Colonial Revival-style dwelling, typical of suburban houses in Ruxton, was altered in the 1940s for the Wright family, which retained ownership for twenty years. It was conveyed to William and Judith Campbell in 1960 following the death of Edward Wright, head of Bull Shipping Lines in Baltimore City.

HISTORY

Located in Ruxton in Baltimore County, the Colonial Revival-style house at 1725 Circle Road was built in 1928 (date of construction provided by former owners) for E. Wright and Elizabeth Simpson. Ruxton is located near the western edge of the Ninth District, approximately two-and-a-half miles west of Towson. The Ninth District is the smallest in size to the rest of the districts with only 38.9 square miles, however, it contains the largest population. The Ninth District includes the upper suburbs of Baltimore City, and is bordered by the Third, Eighth, Eleventh and Twelfth Districts. In 1870, the district had a population of 10,731 and a decade following it doubled in size with a total of 21,414 people.¹

According to one Baltimore County history, a gentleman named Thomas Hooker first settled Ruxton in 1699. On a 500-acre tract of land, which was yielded to him five years earlier, he built a house known as Carr's Pleasure. Today, this house can be seen on the eastern side of Bellona Avenue near the center of the town.² According to the 1877 Hopkins Atlas, both W. Wright & Company and S.A. Hiser occupied the land. Suggested by the location seen on the 1877 Atlas, the property at 1725 Circle Road was originally part of the Hiser farm. The most significant natural element to the area was Lake Roland and its tributaries. According to the atlas, it appears the lake and the northern tributary, Roland Run, bisected Hiser Farm.³

By 1915, the area was divided into parcels and known as Ruxton. Circle Road was laid by this time, extending to the east off of Bellona Avenue and crossing over the Northern Central Railroad and then over Roland Run. According to the 1915 Bromley Atlas, the land on which 1725 Circle Road is located originally belonged to Laura Manning. The property was noted as being just over 4 acres.⁴

The same year the 1915 Bromley Atlas was published, Laura Manning sold the property to Robert E.L. George. Four years later, a trustee for George sold the land to E. Ridgely and Elizabeth Simpson. It appears that the present dwelling at 1725 Circle Road was built under E. Ridgely and Elizabeth Simpson's ownership, reflecting the contemporary use of the Colonial Revival style that was popular during the late 1920s. As an outgrowth of nationwide pride brought about by the American Centennial Celebrations of 1876, the Colonial Revival style appeared in the latter part of the 19th century. The style drew upon many of the defining characteristics of the historic Colonial, Georgian, and Federal styles, such as accentuated main entries, symmetrically balanced facades, double-hung sash windows, side gable roofs, exterior end chimneys, and classical detailing, all of which can be found at 1725 Circle Road. Copying much from these earlier building styles, the new Colonial Revival structures were larger overall and often used bolder detailing. When the Colonial Revival style first appeared it was available exclusively to the wealthy clients of stylish architectural firms. Over time, the style increased in popularity and spread to the suburbs and rural areas where it became more modest. However, as evidenced by the house at 1725 Circle Road, the defining characteristic features discussed above were still present. For example, the main block of the house consists of three symmetrically balanced bays, with a centrally placed entrance accentuated with a classical surround. The double-hung sash windows with 6/6 lights, the three dormer casement windows, the exterior-end chimney and side gable roof, make a direct reference to the earlier Colonial styles. An exterior-end chimney and side-gable roof also refer to the earlier styles. The Colonial Revival details although modest, are clear on both the exterior and interior of the house.

In 1940, Dorothy Bull Wright bought the property from E. Ridgely and Elizabeth Simpson. Nine years later, in 1949, ownership was transferred to Edward B. Wright. It was during the tenure of either Dorothy Bull Wright or Edward Wright that the house was altered when the two-story wing was converted from a garage into living space. Edward Wright's Executor then sold it to Ethel W. and Richard G. MacGill, Jr. in 1960. The MacGills resided at 1725 Circle Road for the next thirty-five years. By this time, the original acreage of the land was reduced from just over four acres to nearly 2.5 acres. In February 2002, Ethel MacGill sold the property to the present owners, Gregory S. and Lauren B. Hurlbrink.
